Litecoin is an open-source, peer-to-peer cryptocurrency that was first introduced in October 2011.

Created by former Google developer Charlie Lee, it ' s a fork of the Bitcoin Core client. The mining of litecoin features an algorithm called Scrypt, which is generally seen as more accessible for new miners since ASICs are not required.

Litecoin is one of the earliest cryptocurrencies, built on Bitcoin's code. Because it closely mimics Bitcoin, is considered one of the more robust blockchain networks, and is regularly used as a testbed for new second-layer Bitcoin code. Unlike fiat currencies that can be printed at a whim, Litecoin is hard-capped.

Litecoin has a lifetime cap of 84 million coins, which is about four times more than bitcoin. In contrast, bitcoin has a cap of 21 million coins, and the currency is further along in its growth cycle, meaning that fewer coins are available. Fewer coins available can translate to a higher value for each coin. Litecoin has faster block generation.
