The Marlowe-Shakespeare Connection

"The Marlowe-Shakespeare Connection: A New Study of the Authorship Question" is a look at something that some literary critics would dismiss as heresy--that legendary author and playwright William Shakespeare did not exist and all of his writing was in fact done by supposedly dead contemporary Christopher Marlowe.

marlowe-shakespeare.blogspot.ca Our Belief is that Christopher Marlowe - in his day England's greatest playwright - did not die in 1593 but survived to write most of what is now assumed to be the work of William Shakespeare. Our Plan is to present accurate information and well-reasoned argument related to this belief.

The International Marlowe-Shakespeare Society

The Marlovian theory of Shakespeare authorship holds that the Elizabethan poet and playwright Christopher Marlowe was the main author of the poems and plays attributed to William Shakespeare. Further, the theory says Marlowe did not die in Deptford on 30 May 1593, as the historical records state, but that his death was faked. Marlovians base their argument on supposed anomalies surrounding Marlowe's reported death and on the significant influence which, according to most scholars, Marlowe's work

The Marlowe

As Samuel Blumenfeld clarifies in his latest book, The Marlowe-Shakespeare Connection: A New Study of the Authorship Question, "The specific event that led to the unforeseen dangerous consequences for Marlowe [i.e., his arrest] was the Dutch Church Libel [of May 1593], the nailing of a 53-line doggerel poem on the wall of the Dutch churchyard in Broad Street. It threatened the Dutch immigrants living in London with harm and violence if they did not leave."

He admitted that Marlowe's early death left Shakespeare with no competition. But if Marlowe lived, he does not think he would have or could have written the works ascribed to William Shakespeare. Burgess thinks he would have taken the road of Shakespeare's rival, Ben Jonson, that is more satirical work, which Shakespeare never wrote.

There really is no longer any credible connection between Marlowe/Shakespeare and Burley on the Hill. In fact – given what we have since discovered about the Bassano family – even if there had still been such a connection, I would have nevertheless thought that Emilia Lanier was a better candidate for the Dark Lady anyway. It might be argued that Christopher Marlowe did not have the moral make-up to have written the works of Shakespeare, either, because he was accused of heresy. Jolly olde England, however, was a time of spies and secrets, an era when agents provocateurs slandered enemies, leading to their ruin and death.
